

Students' Overseas Exchange Experiences to Be Tapped for Further Internationalization: Initiatives in Peking University

WANG Yong, Office of International Relations, Peking University
CHEN Shuang-ye, Chinese University of Hong Kong

Overview

- Introduction
- Initiatives to Tap Students' Exchange Experiences
- Meaningful Internationalization Reconsidered
- Concluding Remarks

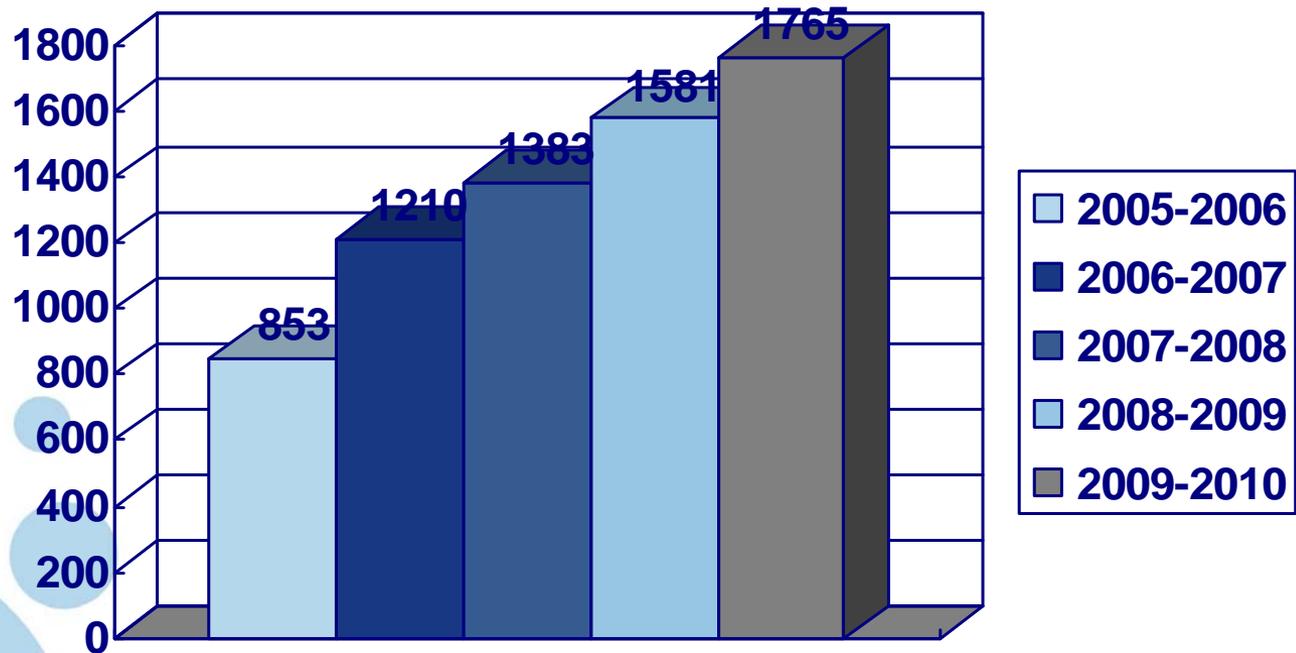

Introduction

Status of student exchange in PKU: Data and trend

Chapter

1

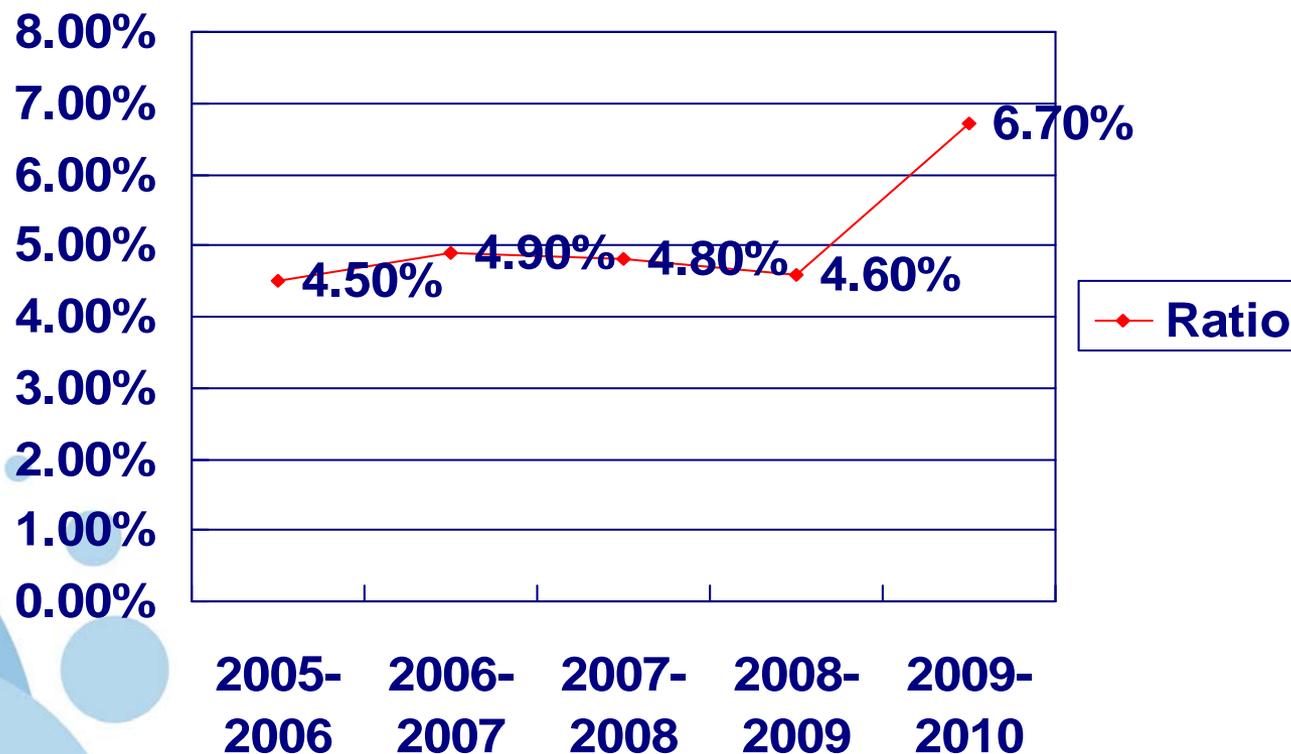

Statistics of students who have overseas exchange experiences
(2006—2010)

Introduction

Status of student exchange in PKU: Data and trend

Chapter

1

Ratio of undergraduate students who have overseas exchange experiences
(2006—2010)

Introduction

Chapter

1

Institutionalized Support

- Regular projects and funding
- Institutional exchange
- Summer/winter schools

Short-term and long-term exchanges

- Overseas exposure
- Overseas exchange experience
- Academic exchange

Initiatives to Tap Students' Exchange Experiences for Internationalization

Chapter

2

- Routinized summaries vs. purposefully engaged and disseminated exchange experiences
- Students' initiative: to establish clubs or societies

Meaningful internationalization for students and the university

- Higher education internationalization without benefiting students is meaningless
- Strategic dissemination and utilization of students' overseas exchange experiences through bottom-up students' networking and top-down administrative support
- Issues of equity and inclusion among students with/without overseas exchange experiences

Chapter

3

Concluding Remarks

Chapter

4

- Revisit the value of the ignored students' exchange experiences
- Meaningful internationalization with students' engagement
- Ultimate purpose of higher education internationalization

Thank You!

