

The International Education of Students at Institutions of Higher Learning in Chinese Mainland

——Taking the Case of Wuhan University

By LU Jiangbin from Wuhan University

Abstract: In the Knowledge Economy Age emanated from the economic globalization and trade liberalization, it is an important mission for institutions of higher learning around the world, and of course China included, to intensify the international education of students, turning out innovation talents with international vision and competitiveness. Moreover, it is also an inevitable and pressing claim of economic globalization. Taking the case of Wuhan University, this thesis will introduce the status quo and prominent problems of the present international education of students at institutions of higher learning in Chinese Mainland, and explore major causes behind the problems. And consequently, the author will spend most of his writing proposing the strategies and measures to be taken in the international education of students at institutions of higher learning in Chinese Mainland.