Virtual Fieldwork

Just by clicking on the screen, you can observe the target objects as if you would be looking up and down, right and left.

ASEAN Center Director Eiji Nawata

Since the 1960s, Kyoto University (KU) has been leading a wide range of academic activities in the ASEAN region. KU conducts practical trainings at field sites, in close cooperation with ASEAN universities and research institutions. Immerse yourself in the "virtual fieldwork"!

Virtual Fieldwork

Experience our unique fieldwork! The original programs were developed by World-Class professors at Kyoto University and ASEAN partner organizations. Watching the sample video clips is free of charge.

If you like the “virtual fieldwork”, you can learn more during KU short-term programs. Some programs offer online platforms or scholarship for selected students with excellent academic records. Past participants said that “the fieldtrip enabled me to understand real application of theories I learned during classroom lectures. Through group work, I made good friends from different backgrounds and countries. Now I feel motivated to connect ASEAN and Japan as a future leader!”

Kyoto University offers a wide range of short-term international programs for students both from ASEAN partners and KU : AUN winter seminar organized by ASEAN University Network (AUN) and KU's Graduate School of Energy Science; RSDC program conducted by Graduate School of Engineering, Graduate School of Global Environmental Studies and Disaster Prevention Research Institute; Graduate School of Agriculture and other departments regularly recruit participating students from ASEAN partners. Over the programs, you will learn latest academic fields, fieldwork, and Japan-ASEAN cultures!
